Desperate Types of Plagiarism

- Copy an entire article from the Web or a subscription online database
- Download a free research paper from the Web
- Buying a paper from a commercial paper mill
- Faking a citation to get by so as to meet the deadline
- Use a paper with permission from a friend who took the same course or chose the same research topic

Why Do People Plagiarize?

Robert A. Harris

1. Ignorance
2. Students are natural economizers
3. Some students fear that their writing ability is inadequate
4. Tutoring out of control
5. Cheating in self-defense
6. Lack of perceived punishment
7. Many students have poor time management and planning skills
8. Some students do not believe professors actually read research papers

Tips on Avoiding Plagiarism

- Start your research as soon as possible.
- Purchase a USB and create folders for each semester and subfolders for each class. Click on the specific class and create subfolders for each project or research paper.
- In gathering information from the online databases for your research paper, be sure to save the full-text articles or e-books as well as the out-of-the-box citations in a required style in the specific folder for the research paper.
- Know the styles of writing so that you can properly tweak and cite the sources in both the body of your article and in your Works Cited or References or Bibliography.
- List your cited sources under Works Cited or References as you write your paper so that you won't miss any citations.

Social Justice

 Social Justice, 2010

Social justice is a rather indistinct term that can mean different things to different people. Commonly, social justice is a policy-making theory that tries to ensure that all members of society are treated fairly and that all have the same opportunities to partake of and share in the benefits of society. For some, this may mean an end to discrimination based on race, creed, ethnicity, income, or sex. Others might favor economic justice that seeks to provide equality through fair taxation and the distribution of wealth, resources, and property. Still others might insist that social justice promotes equal access to education and job placement. Many social justice advocates believe that the term can encompass all this and more.

Often the concept of social justice arises not as a forward-thinking measure brought up in Utopian visions of the world as it could be, but as a defensive stance that rallies critics of current disparities that plague a global society seemingly divided into haves and have-nots. For example, various pro-environment, pro-equality political organizations that band together under the name of the Green Party base their activism on a credo known as the Four Pillars, one of which is the pursuit of social justice. The American Green Party states, "We must consciously
